ON THE RAILWAY, April. "My true love went to Tennessee, She sent the jawbone after me: Her flowers so fair, her bowers so sweet, My poor heart fluttered to her feet."

The sweet messages and the enchanting scenes overcame the admirer, and his fate was natural. And still there are men of less susceptible feelings who are charmed with the fair Tennessee-her mountains and her its reminiscences of the late civil strife. plains, her pure streams breaking away from the deep-down dells of her mountains, and flowing along with the grand rivers which water her table- and low-lands, with their dark shades, that keep guard in the wide alluvial margins of the Mississippi. No lover of nature can pass along the mountain ranges of East Tennessee from Bristol to Chattanooga without beholding constant objects of admiration as they are developed on either hand before the rapidly-moving train. So, when going northwestwardly from that point to Nashville, the middle district of the State presents rich lands with fair fields and meadows that display a highly-favored country; and again, leaving this district, as the train gradually descends into the plain of the west are there peculiarities to interest the stranger, especially in the loamy soil and the magnificent trees which darken the deep recesses of those vast surfaces, which stretch away and whose characteristics excite alike the stranger's curiosity and in-

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY.

Some weeks since this writer undertook to pass from Richmond the whole length of Virginia and Tennessee to the Mississippi. It was with delighted expectation the jourhim a land not by him ever seen before, and the enjoyment fully equalled the expectation. Through Southwest Virginia he passed in the night; but with the enchanting variety of that earthly paradise he was not unfamiliar. The train brought us by morning to the neoga by the light of day. Down the Tennessee Valley, along the ever-changing scenes and bright waters, with the mounby any one until be enjoys it. The lovely valley is a continuation of the great Valley resembling that much-admired country. therefore has a greater variety of pictures;

The waters have scenes in which he lived, cling to the class washed them here and there into something vindictiveness which he fostered? like lines and valleys; but if a man wants to get into a region where nature has had a mad dance, and where things have been left in considerable confusion, let him go into Cumberland mountain, that marks the boundary between Kentucky and Virginia, and he will have a most emphatic illustration of a mountainous country. And yet it ity as well as admired for its bold and gigantic topography, interspersed with some remarkably fine table-lands. Its elevations abound with mineral wealth, and their surfaces are luxuriant with the grasses that are most valuable for stock and most beautiful to behold. To a lover of mountains, and pure fountains, and clear and merry streams, tono happier country than that we speak of. So when we journey down to East Tennessee by Bristol, we go through a sort of gateway of one of the richest parts of Virginia, embracing the Holston and Clinch Valleys, and that less populous but grand and rich region extending to the Kentucky line. THE HOLSTON RIVER.

From Bristol the railway pursues the Holston Valley, which lies parallel with and not far from that of the Clinch river. The land is fine and the scenery charming. Striking the Holston in Hamblin county the road pursues its banks for some forty or fifty miles, passing through Jefferson, Knox, and Loudon. The land is very fertile. The river is one of the most lovely I ever beheld: clear, with a blue tinge, clean, bold shores; and every man who appreciates water must desire to jump into it as he gets a sight of it.

KNOXVILLE. Knoxville is a serene and happy-looking town, yet the passenger gets but a partial view of it as he goes by: the railway running along the valley, while the town is upon the elevation between the road and the river, which flows on the opposite side from that where the road is located. A good thing in Knoxville is a noble suspen- STORE CARPETS, &c., at the highest cash prices. sion-bridge which carries the main street above the railroad, thus avoiding all con flict between the street-travel and the rail-

LOUDON, AND A FINE ESTATE. Continuing along the Holston Valley, we pass through Loudon, perhaps the richest county in the Valley. The grand estate of the family of Lenoir (a Huguenot family which came from North Carolina) is in that county. The estate has been kept buy. well together in a body of 2,500 acres, and is a grand sight to the agriculsuccessfully managed. During the war Burnside's command found its way to the Leneir estate, and the General remarked to old Mr. Lenoir that he admired the property, and had been thinking of proposing to trade for it. The old gentleman said he thought he might swap it for Rhode Island if the General would give boot enough. The transaction there ended. The railway station of Lenoir is a smart village, with a turist. The property is carefully and successfully managed. During the war station of Lenoir is a smart village, with a cotton-mill (conducted by the Lenoirs) and other manufactories.

TRIBUTARIES OF THE TENNESSEE. The Holston and Nolichuckey rivers join at Knexville and form the Tennessee river. From that point it is not far to Kingston, in Roan county, where the Tennessee is joined by the Clinch river, a noble tributary from FRENCH BRANDY. above Kingston, and does not meet that river BILL-HEADS, $7 to $10 per ream, the at again until it reaches Chattanooga, It is a DISPATCH PRINTING-HOUSE noble stream. It flows so near the boundary of the table-lands of Middle Tennessee that it receives few tributaries from the West.

MODDLE TENNESSEE. The table-land-i. e., the Cumberland table-land-is about a thousand feet above the Valley of the Tennessee, and terminates on its west side in irregular coves and valleys. Here the Middle division of Tennessee begins in what is called the highlands, which extend west to the Tennessee river, which sweeps northward from Alabama, through Tennessee and Kentucky, and empties into the Ohio. In the centre of this terrace is the great central basin, in the midst of which flows the beautiful Cumberland river, on which Nashville is located.

THE TENNESSEE AND TTS TRIBUTARIES. From its left bank the bold Tennessee receives its main tributaries, which rise in North and South Carolina. They are the Nolichuckey, Little Tennessee, Hiwassee, and Chickamauga. The last named empties Eself not many miles from Chattanooga; and on this stream, at the railroad that leads to Dalton, took place the well-remembered severe fight. The vailroad passes through pretty and fertile valleys and the short intervals of inferior lands until it nears the VISIT TO THE MOUNTAIN-RECURRENCE famous "Missionary Ridge," which demonstrates itself in the rugged symptoms of the SCENES-SUCH SCENES SHOULD TEND TO route. The region is poor and very rocky. Two high elevations are encountered that are covered with finely-broken rocks that look like quartz and flints. So thoroughly is the surface strewed with them that I thought a good name for the scattered frag-ments would be "rock-seed." The train proceeds amidst this broken country, flanks one great ridge, goes through a tunnel under another, and bursts out at the southern foot of the hill upon the basin in which Chattanooga stands at the opposite side upon the Tennessee river. We behold Lookout Mountain in front and Missionary Ridge running away off towards the east and making a half-circle ending in the bold mountain. The whole scene, with the brave little city under the mountain, is classic for > CHATTANOOGA AND LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN. Lookout Mountain! What a volume of interesting events is connected with this remarkable elevation. I reach Chattanooga at 6 P. M., and step to the portico of the Chattanooga Hotel and behold the mountain, which seems only a couple of hundred yards from me. "I shall go up the mountain before breakfast," says I. It was raining, and so it was next morning; but when I found that the mountain was three or more miles distant I was content.

> A RETURN TO THE ROUTE. I am through the Valley of the Tennessee in its line parallel to the State's eastern boundary. The journey has been grand. The mountains and the waters, and the scenes of valley, cove, and field, have been charming to me. The numerous towns that were upon the road gave added variety to the journey. They seemed to be inhabited by an active and industrious population, which wore the air of unpretentiousness, satisfaction, and solidity.

Along the route a bird's-eye view of recesses in the mountains, with laughing waters in them, was here and there presented which would charm the sportsman and the pleasure-seeker. The mountains are well dotted with mineral fountains, and ney was begun that was to bring before in time to come the States of Tennessee and North Carolina, which divide these scenes between them, will be famed for their fine summer resorts.

ANDREW JOHNSON. Thinking of the sylvan delights of the region, we could but recur to the two very Virginia border, and we entered upon the journey through East Tennessee to Chattablessings and the grand manifestations of Almighty power, who yet were distinguished for very unhappy dispositions. He has recently that are also rich in minerals, there can be departed whither his account will be entirely and justly settled. EFFECT OF NOBLE AND GENTLE SCENES ON HUMAN DISPOSITION. Only it would be a good thing if the things that are lovely and noble in nature in this world could give that gentle bias to the tastes and temper of man that would make him more mild and tractable to his brother. But we steadily have proofs that though such an influence may be exerted to some extent, it is altogether fruitless with a great body of mankind. Look at that un-forgiving and bitter State of Vermont, where the community lives in continued presence of the grandest monuments of Almighty power, as well as of the sweetest scenes of nature. And yet the flames of bitter hate and fanatic vindictiveness are always ascending from the dwellings of the community. If the fires of hell include not flames of this kind they are devoid of some of the most fitting of all fuel.
